1	Please incorporate some interdisciplinary inputs.	Under FOHSS there are three sub- disciplines - i) Economics, ii) International Relations(International Studies) iii) Statistics iv) Interdisciplinary PhD Cross cutting various domains This in itself brings in interdisciplinarity. Further the students under the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences – study some courses with a group of students from varied disciplines – such exposure – stimulates and triggers off interdisciplinary though processes. v) Students are also encouraged to take up some courses from coursera as guided by their research guides/ mentor Under FOHSS there are three sub- disciplines - i) Economics, ii) International Relations(International Studies) iii) Statistics iv) Interdisciplinary PhD Cross cutting various domains This in itself brings in interdisciplinarity. 2	You should include Microeconomics, Macroeconomics and Mathematical Economics in the course work.	i) Students pursuing PhD in Economics are free to sit in for the Masters classes wherein such courses are taught. ii) Students work on 4 credits with their research guide , and if the research guide feels the need to address such concerns - they encourage the students to undertake some domain specific courses on coursera or any other suitable online platform ware i) Students pursuing PhD in Economics are free to sit in for the Masters classes
3	I understand that because of fewer enrollments, only weekend classes were conducted. However, it became extremely difficult for me to manage the fellowship along with classes without even a single day off in entire week. I had to literally come to college on all 7 days, which after some point was very difficult to manage. This issue should be addressed. In future, if only weekend classes are organized, JRFs should be given compensatory day- offs later in the same week (which was not given to me).	Student's convenience has been looked into and considered whenever possible
